

∞♥∞

Chapter 15
Fourteen Months Old
Home For Christmas

♥ December 16, 2005 at 09:16 AM CST

Not your normal Friday report... As you all know, I like to catch everyone before the weekend kicks off and share our Houston-TCH plans with Blake. I can't do that today. Something very special is in the making as I write...Blake and Kimberly are preparing to come HOME! (Or the HCU) We've carefully told Blake as to not jinx the plan. Kimberly is packing things up and gathering Blake's prescriptions. She is one excited MOM. A Mom that has spent almost everyday for the past 14 months by her son's hospital bedside either in Austin or Houston.

Blake and Mommy are coming home!

I don't know the exact time yet, but hopefully Blake will be discharged by early afternoon. Grandma and Grandpa Kramr are assisting in the transfer. Mary will be driving their suburban with Blake and Kimberly; while Eddie Joe drives our Blazer. Thank you both for always being there!

Grandma Johnson and I cleaned and prepared the HCU last night for the special arrival. I'm still buzzing from all the cleaning solutions. Or maybe I'm just overflowing with anticipation of getting everyone back home just in time for the Holidays.

We feel so blessed to have been surrounded by so many who have helped WILL this day into reality. We hope everyone is sharing in our excitement and relief. Hopefully today will close the TCH chapter in Blake's life, and start a new one... So please pray for a safe trip home for Blake and the Kramr Krew.

Oh Happy Day! We Love You All...

Chad

♥ December 23, 2005 at 11:55 AM CST

Report from the HCU (Home Care Unit)... Yes, Blake made it home for the holidays! As of our last report, Blake was discharged and came home last Friday. Yea Blake! The reason no updates have been posted is of course...Blake is home. He is keeping us busy, and we'll take it. We started off the weekend great, Grandparents were a huge help and we are thankful for them. Kimberly was able to go to church on Sunday and share in the Christmas cantata. This was a blessing too, she really enjoyed the program and Pastor Fetter completed the program with a special prayer and blessing for Blake. Thank you Pastor Fetter!

Just to keep us on our toes...we had to make a quick ER visit Sunday afternoon. No worries! Mommy and Daddy just got the dosing of the potassium a little wrong, and for safety sake took Blake to have a blood test to check the levels. Everything was fine. I'm sure it won't be the last time we head that way. Fortunately there is a hospital in SW Austin that is hardly ever busy, and we felt secure Blake would not be in a waiting room filled with coughing, sick kids and adults. In and Out...

This past week was very good, but also very busy. Mommy got a much deserved Girls' Night Out. Kimberly and Lee Ann got to spend some quality time together...probably sharing stories of how great their husbands are...Ha! Kim was glad to get dressed up and go out for the night. Good for her, right...

Blake is loving being at home! He is feeling better ...resting better...and acting like a totally different little boy. We are so glad to see him smile and laugh more. Blake of course misses all his 'Angels' back in Houston ...and sends them kisses each night. We are looking forward to cuddling up as a family around our little boy this Christmas. We will miss not being able to be with the whole family...as we are carefully limiting contact with potential bugs that could send Blake back to the hospital ...but will share holiday wishes over the phone lines. Blake especially wants to share greetings with his cousins and looks forward to seeing them all a little later. We love you Brooks,

Rainbows For Blake

∞ ♥ ∞

∞ ♥ ∞